AN OLD STORY RE-TOLD.

It troubled her more than she could tell.
That in the town where she chanced to dwell,
The saying of "stupid as a goose,"
Was one that was very much in use.
For snewrs and saubbing are hard to hear,
Be he man or beast, I do not care,
Or pinioned fowl of the earth or air,
We're all of the same opinion there. It troubled her more than she could tell, Now, as she ponstered the matter o'et, A fix came walking along the shore; With a pleasant smile he towest his head, "Good evening, Mr. Goose!" he said, "Good evening, Mr. Fox!" quoti she,

She had little barm to lear from him;
For, with all his tricks, he could not swim
And, indeed, his voice was sweet and kind
'Thear Mrs. Goose, you've a froubled mine
I only wish I could help you through.
There's nothing I would not gladly do
For such a beautiful bird as you."
Which sounded nice, and was really true.

"If harts my feeling, and wounds my pride, That in these days my sisters and I, Who saves old from by our warning cry, should be called the silly gerse. Ah, me ' If I roughly learn supplies the silly gerse. should be called the silly gerse. Ah, if I could learn something fine, you se lake writing, or reading the A. B. C.
